Minor in Business, Ethics, and Society/Ethics, Society, and the Institution of Business Themes, Worksheet, and Sample Curricula

BES/ESIB students typically work with a faculty advisor to develop a coherent curriculum exploring a specific area of concern regarding the institution of business. You will identify your area of concern and the preliminary curriculum to explore it as part of your application; further work in the minor will require you to select an ethical and a societal theme from the options described below.

Ethical themes:

- Personal ethics: Understand the kinds of ethical issues that arise at the level of the individual, and the importance of ethical congruence between an individual and an organization. Become familiar with the aspects of individual psychology and the work environment that make it harder or easier for individuals to identify, analyze, and act on such issues. Develop ways for individuals to address the hindrances.
- Organizational ethics: Understand the kinds of ethical issues that arise at the level of the organization, the typical ethical structures of organizations, and the importance of organizational ethics (both internally and externally directed). Become familiar with the aspects of organizational structure and the work environment that make it harder or easier for organizations to identify, analyze, and act on such issues. Develop ways for organizations to address the hindrances.
- Politics: Understand the kinds of ethical issues that arise at the level of an industry, and the importance of regulation. Become familiar with the aspects of industry structure and governance that make it harder or easier for governing bodies to identify, analyze, and act on such issues. Develop ways for governing bodies to address the hindrances.

Societal themes, regarding the fundamental orientation of the institution of business:

- Corporate sustainability: Develop an understanding of corporate sustainability: what it is, how it is measured, and how it is justified as an orientation.
- Corporate social responsibility: Develop an understanding of CSR: what it is, how it is measured, and how it is justified as an orientation.
- Corporate political responsibility (CPR, also called political CSR). Develop an understanding of the political role of private enterprises. Become familiar with the ways in which an organization or industry is or could be involved in "political" action, whether in conjunction with a governmental body or in its own right, and when such engagement would be justified.

See sample curricula on the final page.

Having selected your themes, you are now in a position to begin filling out the worksheet on the next page. Upon acceptance, you will complete a google form version of this this worksheet and update it each semester as you proceed through your curriculum. In your senior year you will take the Capstone Seminar, where you will draw on your previous work to propose that a single entity (a person, organization, or political entity) take a specific ethical action with respect to a specific ethical or social issue within your chosen area of concern, presenting an ethical, legal, and financial argument in favor of your chosen action to the actors best placed to act on it.

Worksheet

Area of Concern – the general area in which the institution of business engages or could engage with society in an ethically significant way

Themes - ethical (personal, organizational, or political) and societal (corporate sustainability, CSR, CPR)

- •

Issue(s) – specific points of conflict or opportunity within your area of concern that an individual organization (for-profit, non-profit, or policy) could act on; cite any sources you've already identified (in your work experience memos, coursework, and elsewhere) as footnotes
