Sociology of Emotion
Prof. Jennie Germann Molz

What are emotions, where do they come from, and what do they do? When we feel cheerful or anxious or embarrassed or angry or just plain out of sorts, we often attribute these emotions to the internal workings of our own minds or personalities. But what if we thought of our emotions not just as internal moods or sensations, but rather as socially constructed feelings that have real social effects? These are the questions we’ll explore in this course as we examine the relationship between individuals and society through the prism of emotion. We will do this first by engaging with some of the key sociological theories and concepts that explain the place of emotion in the social world. Then we will examine the way emotions are constructed in the private spheres of the body, the home, and the family before turning our focus to the circulation of emotion in political contexts such as national citizenship, social activism, neoliberalism, and globalization. Along the way, we will pay careful attention to the way emotion intersects with race, class, gender, and sexuality. Our aim will be to understand how our individual lived experiences of love, happiness, fear, pride, or shame are intertwined with broader structures of feeling at the national and global level.

Seminar Descriptions

ANTH 320 WF 12:30-1:45
Theory in Anthropology
Prof. Jeremy Jones
Permission needed

This seminar provides an in-depth and historical exploration of the ways in which anthropologists have theorized culture since the discipline's founding in the 19th century. We will study some of the key trends, concepts, and models in anthropological theories of culture: evolution, functionalism, interpretive anthropology, Marxism, feminist anthropology, postmodernism, globalization, and neoliberalism. A central concern will be how anthropologists have defined culture, conceptualized its processes, and theorized how individuals interact with culture in ways that challenge or reproduce power relations, political economy, and social structures.

SOCL 361 M 9:30-12:00
Leadership and Social Change
Prof. Susan Crawford Sullivan
Permission needed

An advanced seminar focusing on sociology of leadership in social action. Course includes sociological analysis of leadership, power, social movements, and organizational behavior. The seminar also examines teachings on social issues such as poverty, immigration, and the environment through the lens of comparative religions, with a particular focus on Catholic social teaching. The seminar explores these topics with a blend of social science theory and biography of spiritually-motivated leaders for social change. Students will analyze and write about their own semester-long leadership projects in light of course readings.
This class is designed to provide students with the skills to critically examine the role of narratives within the sociology of Health & Illness. We will explore first person accounts of living with various illnesses, including mental/physical, acute/chronic, contagious, and age-related conditions. Comparisons will be made across both historical and cultural contexts to highlight the socially constructed nature of health and aging. The interaction between social institutions, such as modern medicine, mass media, the family and politics, and subjective experiences will be studied to demonstrate the sociological relevance of illness. The class will engage the role of labeling theory, postmodern conceptions of health, and differences in illness narratives according to race/ethnicity, class, gender, sexual orientation and age on the “moral career” of illness.

We are delighted to announce that Professor Daina Cheyenne Harvey has received tenure and promotion to Associate Professor. Please congratulate him on achieving this important milestone in his career!

The students will present on Wednesday, April 25 from 9:30 – 12:00 pm in Hogan 304/305.

Study Abroad

The Department of Sociology and Anthropology strongly encourages students to participate in year-long, semester, Maymester and summer study abroad programs. Students can transfer up to four courses from abroad as electives toward their majors. In addition, sociology majors can often fulfill their theory requirement abroad. Please consult with Prof. Ellis Jones to see if your study abroad program offers an equivalent theory course.
